Magnetic porcelain flooring collection

The solution for dry laying porcelain flooring on raised metal access floors which allows full future accessibility to the floor void – our process applies a magnetic backing to the underside of the tile and a colour coded ABS banding to the tile edges which simulates a grout line. The strong magnetic adhesion gives the same performance as a traditional wet laid floor.

The process can be applied to any rectangular or square tile including porcelain wood effect planks. The system is laid without any adhesive or grout and is thus a clean process reducing installation times by around 80% with the floor immediately usable. A further benefit is the ability to easily replace damaged tiles or to remove the floor completely for reuse elsewhere.

Although we work closely with a number of premium Italian and Spanish producers, our process can be applied to a vast range of porcelain, marble and other natural stone products allowing the designer or specifier great latitude in selecting a truly bespoke floor for their project.

Completing the system is a rubber backed version suitable for laying on concrete floors. Whilst this variant requires a near-perfect surface such as can be achieved using a free flow Anhydrite screed, it offers the same benefits as our magnetic version with speed of lay and replaceability making this an attractive solution for numerous applications.
